

NY-21: My Pledge to You

As a member of a small business family, I know firsthand how difficult it is for small businesses to operate in New York. High taxes make it extremely difficult for businesses to expand and hire new employees, and for hardworking families to save more of their hard-earned paychecks for future expenses.

I pledge to the hardworking families and small businesses in the 21st Congressional District of New York that as a Member of Congress I will not vote to raise income tax rates on New York individuals or businesses. If elected to Congress, I will go to Washington to cut taxes and overhaul the tax code to achieve a flatter, fairer tax system to help our economy grow.

Raising taxes on hardworking New York families and small businesses is not the answer to slow economic growth and high unemployment.

This is my pledge to the hardworking families and small businesses in the 21st Congressional District.
